A Patient's Story

"SOUTH BUCKS HOSPICE HELPED TO SAVE MY LIFE"

An ex-patient says South Bucks Hospice helped to save his life after depression made him want to end it all.

"I had a real downer during my second course of chemotherapy, so much so that I wanted to try to do myself in," he said. "I phoned my wife and said 'that's it, I won't be back' and drove myself off in my car.

His wife called police who intercepted him and returned him home. "But I was still lost and we knew I had to do something," he said.

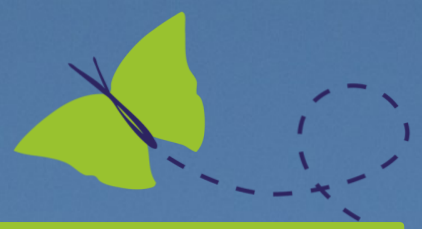

He contacted Macmillan Cancer Support and it was suggested he should go to a hospice, even though his condition was treatable.

"I was a bit taken aback because a hospice to me at that time meant death and the end."

At South Bucks Hospice, his outlook was transformed as he began chatting with his fellow patients who could understand what he was going through.

"Without South Bucks Hospice and what they have helped me with, I do wonder if I would still be here."
